Ainny intecesting topics have been discussed. The work has been of bigh order and the tendency to mod ernize school methods and inspire a greatec educational zest for the practreal things of life has been encouraging. Things heretofore considered extrinsic, have been emphasized as invaluable. Among the live topics discussed were Hyglene and Sanitation, more cultural and fewer disciplinary subjects, more practical and less the-

Dr. W. H. O'llannon made a spiendid talk on Hygiene and Sanitation and their influence upon character termation liter J. J. Dickey gave an address on the use of the Bitde in the public schools fir. J. G. Carpenter regaled the teachers with his lecture on prevention of tuberculowls.

One of the most prevalent themes has been a higher scholarship and tupre protessional training for the teacher. There has been a tendency of the teachers toward the practical

In history the trend of thought was to emphasize the achievements of peace rather than itonize was heroes

The familiar subjects of arithmetic s hystology, language, granimar, etc. were thoroughly discussed and new methods of presentation were sug gested. The pivotal points in the formation of character were to be suggested inthe pursuit of each subject where it was at air practical. It was urged that correlation he followed to a greater extent than formerly and more attention given to the things that the child will need and use in the life into which he is vast after school It was nrged that the child or student be brought into closer unity with the world about nin.

Profs. 3. 8 Robinson, of Huston ville, Caleb Newell, of Waynesburg, R. L. Grubhs, of Moreland, and many others of the younger teachers have tien potent factors inthe general discussions. Civic Improvement, Com saunity Pride, Co-operation of Parents and many other vital themes were discussed in an interesting way The ministers of the town have all been present at the morning exercises and have given some heipful talks on Civic Righteoneness and ethical and moral principles.

Horrible Affair

TRAMP ATTACKS YOUNG MER CER COUNTY GIRL

An unknown white man, supposed to be a transp, assaulted Mary Ashtord, a 12-year-old child near Munday's Landing, Meccer county, this week. The child had gone to the rural mail box several hundred yards fcom ber home and the man, seated on the roadside nearby, called to her to come to him saying that he had aomething to tell hec.

When she approached him, be grabhed her and threw his hand ovec her mouth. The child fought heroically and in the struggle all her clothing was torn from her body. Her cries away, who hurried toward the scene Scelug the negro approaching, the traiup relinquished his hold on the little girl, jumped the fence and escaped into the Kentucky rivec cilffs The negro fired three ahota after the tramp as he ran away. Officers and bloodhounds are on the trail of the tramp and there is much excitement ment in the community.

Fine Performance

GIVEN BY HUSTONVILLE HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

Hustonville July 13

The students of the Hustonville High School, under the direction of Prof. S. S. Robinson, pleased a fair audience at Alcocn's Opera House last Satucday evening by their presentation of a five act comedy. "The Deacon" for most of those who took pact, this was but the second appearance in public and the pecformance was most creditable. The play was sufficiently varied in character to please the most diverse tastes, sppealing alike to the lover of the meiodramatic and the comic.

Mesars. James Hall and Tom Back aa "the Deagon" and the villain, reapectively, did credit to the leading roles. Carlisle Myers as Pete, a negro aecvant, was decidedly the hit of the evening with the little folks, while Paul Willis was successful as the 'Deacons" boy, Miss Ama Barker aa Miss Fawcett, of uncertain age, was excellent, but to Misa Blanche Barnette, the cejected consort of the "tilain, must be credited the most difhoult cole. Missea Isa Flovd. Elia Barnette and Anna Dioyd sustnined their parts acceptably, while little Miss Roberta Diain la always happy on the stage, Massra.Rogec Hicks and Orestus Flyd were well up to the atanjard John illeks as the organ grindec needed only tut the monkey to "getta de mun" and then Barnette gave pointers to the rest dent parsons on "get up" and miniatecial dignity.

Between acts a humorous cecitation by Mlas Blanche Barnette and music. instrumental and vocal, helped to caim the excitement of the audience, and restcain their impallence for the next scene. Prof. Robinson is to be congratulated on the success he has met with while working under difficulties incident to vacation time The receipts of last night go toward the very commendable object of buying a library for the High School

Miss Lois Willia assisted with the music and tess the threat of all for her timely help.

BEST CHAPLAIN STATE PRISON EVER HAD

YET COMMISSOIN WILL REMOVE. REV. JOSEPH SEVERANCEL FROM OFFICE

ltev Joseph Severance, formerly of this city, who has made the heat Chapiain the State Penitentiary ever had will be retired by the board of Prison Commissioners this month. Speaking of the matter the Frank fort State Journal says.

The term of ottice of Br. Joe Sev erance as prison chaptain will not end with the next meeting of the Prison Board, but nevertheless be will be succeeded by ltev, Walter Vreeland, of this city, a Methodist minister who is a brother of Graham Vreennd, managing editor of the Courier-Journal. It has been cumored since the jast session of the Legislature that Dr. Severance would be succeeded by itey. Vreeland, but the general iltupression prevsiled that the prison Commission would pecmit Dr. Severance to serve out his term inasmuch as he has established himseit here with his familiy, consisting of his wife and several fittle children

It has been given out that Dc. Sever ance would resign but that is not the case, foc Dc. Severance says that he has had no intention of resigning. As a spicitual advisor those who are familiar with that part of the prison life say that Dr. Severance has been one of the most successful men ever to occupy the post at the prison. The good discipline maintained at the polson is said to be in a large measure due to the faithful and attendive work of Dr. Severance. He has the reputation of having converted as many men who were in the prison as any other chantain ever to occupy the post. and he is the man who started the night school smong the convicts that enabled many of them to leath to read and write so that they will be able to improve their minds and counted and reported to beadquartecs their spiritual being while convicts This night school was not a part of the cegular work of the chaplain, but was carried on last winter by Dr. Severance simply because he was so enthusiastic about his wock and his desice to do good among the convicts. The many friends of Dr. Severance will regret to hear that he is going to lose his position as chapiain but the convicts will be the greatest losers.

106 Indictments

RETURNED BY CASEY COUNTY GRAND JURY-OTHER NEWS

Middieburg, July 14. The late grand jury at Liberty got a move on ttaelf and ceturned 106 lndictments. Circuit couct adjourned and left much of the docket until the next term. John Chapman was tried for the killing of J. W. Luttrell last August and was acquitted. Othec cases connected with that double killing were continued until the Novembec teem. The jury falled to agree on a verdict in the case against Alva Eills foc shooting Allen Ellis last Macch.

It will be observed from this letter that news is scarce in this aection, but fleas were never more plentiful.

Middlebucg has always been noted foc fat men and ahe still keeps up hec reputation along that line. Thece ace some half dozen 200-paunders hece now and they are a pretty joily aet.

Caleb Powers was billed to speak ot Yosemite Wednesday. Edwards and Powers have out their mud slingers and they seem to be quite busy. They seem to have cealized that they have quite a lot of alinging to do and have placed a full force of slingers in the field in order to get it all slung by Sept. 15, as they will not be allowed to sling nny aftec that date. Charles I'tniey la the bosa slinger of the whole lay-out.

Mrs. Spuriln Shacp, of New Castle, is here with celatives foc a stay of some months or more. Mrs. H. M. Shouse, of Danville, was here Sunday Rev. James Ballntyne, of Georgetown, filled his cegular appointment at the Baptist church Sunday mornlug and evening He preached at Lanham's school house Sunday afternoon.

'The piculc at Jones' park Saturday was well attended and the crowd was a most orderly one. If there was a drop of whisky on the grounds, it did not show itself. The program getten up by young ladies of the Methcellst and Baptist Sunday schools was well cendeced by the chlidren und seemingly highly appreclated by those present. Rev. J. S. Taylor, J. L. Adkins, J. Q. Montgomery and James Ballntyne made appropriato talks.

CHAPTER I.—A young woman cast sahore on a lonely island, finds a sell-lary inhabitant, a young white man, dressed like a savage, and not able to speak in any known language.

CHAPTER II.—She decides to educate him. She finds him in an attitude of prayer, babbling an incoherent jargon.

CHAPTER III.—She finds a human skeleton and the skeleton of a dog. She finds a Bible and a silver box bearing the name of John Revell Charnock, with a date Z years before her landing.

not iell exactly in what mood ber prisoner might be. indeed, she approached him with e certain terror, accounted for partly by the situation and partly by the fact that in making this change in her garments she had, as it were, cut berself off from civilization and brought berself in some degree at least nearer his physical level. But she could not leave him there all night. Summoning her courage, therefore, and with a bold front before him, she advanced to the tree and untied the rope from the trunk and untied it from his neck as well. He stood silent, unresisting through it all, a rather pitiful figure she thought at first, until he was freed from the degrading haiter.

Then she waited in intense and eager curiosity as to what he should do next. The iron in his situation had eaten into his soul. He had been mastered by force. He could not understand it. He did not love the mastery. Still, without the knowledge of his own powers, there occurred to him no way to resent the ignominy to which he had been subjected. He turned and walked away from her. She stood amazed, staring after him. It was the first time he had withdrawn himself from her presence. Where was he going? Was this a declaration of war? Was there to be enmity between them? in vague terror, moved by a sudden impulse again, she called him. "Man!" she said.

He stopped, hesitated, looked back, turned and went on again. He was deeply hurt. She could not see him It was unthinkable that he should go ile was dangerous away from her. By ber side she could control him.

"Man!" she called again. But this time he did not beed. An idea spreng to her brain, working quickly under the pressure. She lifted up her voice, for be was fer from her now end plodding steadily, doggedly toward the trees.

"John!" ahe cried. "John Reveil Charnock!"

And at that sound the man stopped. He turned end looked at her again. "John!" she repeated. "John!

She approached bim. As she did so end when she could get near enough to him, she observed that wrinkling of the brow, that look of emazement which she had poticed before. It was as if some latent memory, some recollection of the past, were struggling against the obscurity of years, as if something were endeavoring to thrust forgetfulness that ovarwhelmed his mind, as if she were a voice which brought beck things he could neither understand nor utter, end yet which maant something to him.

"John!" she cried again, coming nearer to bim.

She thrust out her hand; she touched him. Agein she noticed that strange emotion consequent upon her touch. She laid her hend upon his shoulder. There wes emity, confidence, reassurance. She patted him as she might

Some one else had cellad this man Jobn in days gone by. The sound was not unfamilier to him. He enswered to his nama. That was he John Revell Charnock! She feit as if she were entering upon tha solution of the mystery of his presence. Perhaps the morrow would tell Sha would examine that boat and those decaying evidences of bumanity on the farther shore.

She felt elated that night ere she went to sleep in the cave. The clew to the mystery she fencied was in her hend. She had such occupetion before ber as she bad nevar hoped to come upoe in a desert island, at least. The rope added to her security. By piling stones before the entrance to the ceve and reinforcing them with the boards from the wreck of the boot end some fallen tree brenches on the shore, she made a sort of e barrier to it, not e barriar that would bave kept out of the cava any one who desired to enter, but one which would have to be removed before one could enter. And sba so arranged metters, tying the end of the rope to ber wrist, thet eny attampt to remova it would immediately waken her. That night she slept se cura end unmolested.

The task to which she set heraelf in possible one to many women, and indeed it was a hard one to her. The distant from the nearest tree. There was absolutely no shelter from the flerce heat of the tropic sun. She was not yet fully accumutomed to it, and indeed perbaps she never would be able to endure it without some sort of a bead covering. She improvised a bonnet from the leaf of a low spring ing paim tree, which, with her remaining handkerchief, she tied about her head. And then with her watchful friend by her side she descended the beech to the boat and began to dig. It was hard end very tedious work, With the flat make-shift shovel in the shepe of the rough piece of board it was simost impossible to lift the sand. Yet she attacked the task resolutely and persevered sturdily for a long time until the sweat beaded her forehead, her back ached, ber hands, unused to manual toll of any kind, were almost blistered. She realized at last that she would have to give it over.

She wondered as she ceased her labors whether the constant observation which the man had subjected her to would enable him to continue the work. As an experiment she banded him the shovel, stepped out of the excavation she bed made and pointed toward it. He understood instantly, She was surprised at the unusual quickness of his apprehension, for he set to work with a right good will end in e minute the sand was flying. She noticed haif in envy how much more progress he made than she could ef-What was labor for ber was play for him, and yet after a little space he stopped, threw down the shovel and looked at her.

She had got in the habit of speaking to him as if he understood, so she pointed to the shovel again, exclaim-

"Pick it up and go on."

Her meaning was obvious to him if her language was not. It equally was evident to her that he had no desire whatever to proceed with his task, but he was still under the constraint of her superior personality and presently he did as she bade him. It amused her to reflect that to all the other lessons, ao remakable as almost to make his brain reel and whirl, he was now learning the lesaon of toil. If she could only keep pace with these great abstract concepts she was putting into his being by giving him some mental realization of them, so that the spiritual development would keep pace with the practical, she would be thoroughly satisfied with her educational pro-

She mused on the problem as he iabored silently and vigorously. He stopped once or twice, but she kept him to it, e feet vastly greater then she reelized, until the interior of the boot, which wes a small ship's boot, a dinghy, had been entirely cleared out. She had watched carefully every

It was not so hard to shovel the sand away from it end bere she did make a discovery, for eithough the letters had been simost obliterated by the action of the sand, she could still make them out. After some study she decided that the name of the boat, or of the ship to which it bad bolonged, had been Nansemond of Norfolk, Virginia. That was the net resuit of the hard lebors of a long morning. It told her somsthing, but not much. Assuming that the man with her was John Reveil Charnock and assuming that he had come to the island in the past on that boat, it indicated that he was et lesst an American and · Virginian. It identified bim, if her suppositions were correct, and wheth-

cluded that she was correct. Admitting all this, however, it gave her no clew from which to hulld a history. The testimony of the boat was interesting, that was all. Her first thought was to leave it where it was, but ber second thought was better. With the aid of the stout piece of board which had served her for a shovel, she hammered away at the stern piece until she broke it off. She saw now that the boat must have lain there in the sand for many years, for the wood was brittle and the fastenings largely destroyed, for the stern piece came easily away. She laid it aside for a moment intending to preserve it with the Bible. Heaven knows what dream of future usefulness in the way of evidence establisb-

The boat appeared to be in an excellent state of praservetion. There were even e pair of oars lying on the thwarts. If she could have dug it out of the sand entirely, she fancied she could have leunched it end used it. But auch e task was utterly beyond ber. Besides there would have been no gain in having the boat affect. She would not dare to take it out beyond tha barrier reef and there wes nothing to row for in the legoon.

She easily broke the rotting lines with which the oars were secured and took them out. They would be useful perhaps in some way. And then after e long look at the boet and with e feeling that her labor bad been mainly

Then she threw herself down under trone and rasted. Sha had left watch, her pracious watch, back on the cave with the book. She did seed dare to corry it around with har. the had no way of carrying it in the Ma, single germent which she wore but sha judged from the height of tha that it must be noon time. They made their meal off the fruits of the Selands this time with a rich and fulcy memanut edded, which the men got for har at her suggestion in the sign ian mage at which she was becoming ex port, by climbing with wonderful aglithe ane-like agailty almost, one of the coccanut palms with which tha mand abounded. Thera were fruita of various sorta in great plenty on tha Mand end she wes becoming accus semed to the diet by degrees.

She passed the noon hour in trying to add to the mental equipment of her companion. He could say a number words now and had some idea of their meaning, although he had not 304 attempted to freme sentences nor had she yet tried to teach him so to da. It wes pleasant under the shade of the trees. She found herself marveling at times as to the contentment that possessed her, a product of the age suddenly plunged into the Edan-The existence which her forebears might have enjoyed ten thousand years before.

The hours ran on until tha declinhe sun and the coolness that came with the late afternoon warned her that if sha were to continue her explorations ahe must be about it immediately. So she rose and nerving berself to her task went toward the coppies where fay the ghostly remains what hed been a human being. Forcing herself to the duty with her haifs she carefully cut away the rushm, being particular not to disturb the beacs of the skeletons. As before she all this in the face of a vigorous personstrance from the man, in some way, she could not tell how, the place was horrible to him. He would never have come near it evidently of his own will, and although the power of memcary in him was but latent, the impresm that had been produced upon him By what she found there at some period in his life was atrong enough to make blm evold it forever.

She dld not ask him for assistindeed, she would not have trinsted him with the knife under any chromatances, and he made no attempt to keep close to her. Hs stood on the outskirts of the copplee in a great state of excitement, uttering without sequence or reason such where so she had taught him. To him. in this instence, she gave no heed.

Presently she had completely uncovered the two skeletons. She had studied anatomy, but was not a specialist in that department of human Marning. She thought that the skele be before her was that of a woman. The measured Ita length with a piece of tall grass and compared it with her They were both of a size. The and in which the bones lay was soft porous. Every vestige of clothing had long since rotted away end disap peared with the flesh it covered. If the person whose bones lay there had worn any article of gold or silver, which) being rustless would have surwived the long exposure, they were prebably buried in the earth beneath the Sense. She would attend to that

Their she looked toward the bones at the feet of the human remains and decided instantly that they were the c. Across the vertebrae his william of metal. She picked it up. secognizing it instantly as a plate which dad probably belonged to a dog collar. There was an inscription m it which she did not take the trouble at the moment to read. Slipping it into the hosom of her tunic and making sure that the confining rope would keep it from falling out, she steeped down and gathered the bones of the human being up in her arms, remakers as the task was, and carried then dawn to the boat on the beach. The faid them in the bottom of the bout carafully and then moved by a auduen inspulse, she went back and athered up those of the dog which he and in the boat also. It was an corr matter to tumble a few spadefuls of sand over the hones. Then she left them in that rude Viking sepulture, knowing that time would soon refill the empty dinghy and the bones would be safely buried unless some other investigator should uncover them.

The man had assisted her in no way in this process, but his excitement was very great. While she stood looking down at the little heap of sand which oppered all that remained of this forform and forgotten visitor to this lebind, wondering if the fete of that trespasser upon thees slient shores would some day be hers, the man sudchaly dropped on his knees as sha had seen him do on her first night on the sland. He put his hands together and jegaa thet mumbled jargon which sha nd not been able to understand, but which had seemed to her more like inguage than anything to which he had given vent. She was surprised be measure, yet ahe listaned with every faculty on the alart if possible comprehend what he had been say ing, and presently a familier sound or ema fashed into her mind that he was making use of a prayer which she hirself had used in childhood; that hourd, fantastic, impossible though the conclusion was, he was saying the fidieh petition, "Now I lay ma down

The first impulse of the woman was to laugh. The next impulse was to off the palm leaf hat and stand with bowed haad and clasped hands. What marvelous miracle was this that throughout the years which she d ne longer doubt this man had me on the Jeland, there had survived the one childish habit prayer and that the one vastige of language which had remained to him was the language of petition. She did not believe in it, of course. It was absurd to her, but it was none the less wonderful. It filled har with a certain we. It was as if some power had maintained a hold upon the conscious aces of this man in this way.

"Now I lay me down to slaep!" How long it had been since ehe had said thet? She believed nothing, she cared for nothing, but the woman hid her face in her hands for a moment. Sha clenched her taeth and forced out of her mind that which at thet moment was striving for birth. She was to teach this man everything. She was to make him know life and history Sha was to bring him in touch with all the glories of to-day and sha recognized in that hour, although she did not and could not admit it, that perhaps ha might teach her something as well, something that sha had not known or something that she had for gotten, without the knowledge of which all her scienca was a vain, a foolish, a futile thing.

The little prayer wes ended. The men rose to his feet. She took her spade and went back to the place where the bodies had lain and there began carefully to scrape away the earth, examining scrupulously every shovelful ere she threw it aside. In one place where the hand had fain, sha remembered, her labors were re warded. She came across two rings, a dlemond and a plain circlet of gold. These she placed in her tunic with the collar and continued her digging.

It was growing late and growing dark, but she left no squere inch of ground unexplored. She found nothing else. The rings belonged to a woman evidently, Her surmise in that particular was right. There were no other metal parts of her epperel left. The nalls in her shoes, the steel of her corset had rusted away and left no sign. There was nothing remaining but the two little baubles preesing against her own werm flesh.

So intent had she been that the sun had gone down before she ceased and upon the Island there descended that quick end sudden night of the tropics. The wind had risen, the old ocean was thundering on the harrier reef and a heavy sea breeze was shricking through the trees. The sky on the horizon was overclouded and the clouds were rising rapidly. There would be a storm, which was develop ing with tropic rapidity. Quickly she retraced her steps along the sand toward the cava on the other side, the man following.

They had progressed not mora than half way when the storm bust upon them. Peals of thunder end flashes of lightning filled the air. It was such a display of the Titanic forces of nature as might have appailed the stoutest heart. It filled the woman with a vague terror. She noticed with satisfaction that the man was entirely unmoved by the terrific demonstre tions of nature. By the fleshes of lightning as they stumbled along in the otherwise total blackness she could see his face serene. In a moment of apprehension she caught his hand with her own and clung to It tightly. It was the unconscious appeal of the physical weeker to the physical stronger. Her hand had clasped tha hands of her fellow creatures many times. Never before had his palm met the pelm of human being, much less a woman's. She could feel that tremor run through him, but by instinct, as it were, he met her hand cleep with his own, and together they made their way to the cave.

They had scarcely reached it when the rain burst upon them. The heavens were opened, the floods descended, they beat upon the sands in fury. She could not drive him out there in that flood for the night. She motioned him to come within the entrance of the cave which was sheltered from the wind and which was dry and still. She made him lie down near the entrance and then, withdrawing herself into a recese at the side, she disposed of the oars, which she had carried home on her shoulders, in front of her from wall to wall end lashing them with the rope to her person made another feeble harrier, but which would yet give the alarm to her and waken her If It were moved. And presently she went to sleep. She wes too tirad even to speculate on her discoveries or to plece them together; that would be occupation for the morning.

CHAPTER V.

Tha Volcas of the Past.

it rained hard during most of the night. The woman slapt lightly and whenever she woke she could hear outside of her sanctuary the roar of the atorm. The man, as usuel, slept the long hours through as undisturbed by the commotion as a child. it was apperent to her that he had absolutely no fear. Whathar this was due to ignorence or tamperament she could not eay. Was faar, after all, under the conditions in which his life had been lived, a purely artificial quality, or wes it natural and inherant? He had avoideaces, abhorrences, antipathiss, as the skaletons in the coppice which she had buried. Was that avoidance fear or was it something else? Was it instinct or did it arise from recollaction? She rather fanoled the last. If so, it was evident that the man hed been on the Island a long time. It would have taken years for the metal that must have been shout that woman's person to rust away, for the stael clasps of the dog's collar entirely to disappear.

Upon that faint memory that he cherished, upon that prayer that he prayed, she could build the foundation of his education. She had been so succossful in training him and in rastraining him, in influencing him and swar-

ing him so far that she had abundant confidence in her shillty to do so to the end. It was quite avidant that life would be easily supported nader the conditions in which it must be lived on that island. She need have no physical concarn as to her material wall baing or comfort, and here was mantal education and stimulus which mada her for the time baing forget the rast of the world.

Indeed, sha thought bittarly, as sha lay awaka during the long watches of the night, that the rest of the world was nothing to her and that cha hated She, therefore, not only was becoming resigned to her situation, but was rejoicing in it. She would teach this man all she knaw. She would teach him to think to reflect to reason. Sha would teech him to talk. Since she hed a book, alheit a sorry one, she would teech him to read.

The rain fell mora softly now. Her ayes drooped.

She slept again only to wake end muse once more. She could have slept better hed ha been outside. How could he lie there in the completa and steeping insensibility of slumber? Her hand fell ageinst her breast. There was the treasura trove of har existenca the day before. What would they tell her? She could scarcely welt un til morning to look. So she woke and slept and woke and slept until the dey broke

It was bright and sunshing out, although there were ominous clouds all about the wastern horizon. It was probable that the rainy season was at hand, if not upon them. She regretted that sha had not given more time to the study of neture, to the fauna and flora of the South seas, to the conditions of wind and weather under which life was lived there. Much philosophy would sha gledly heve parted with for auch practical informetion. She had to plece her ideas of affairs out from scraps and tags of knowledge, unclassified, incoherent; from vague recollections of childhood stories and romances: from carelessly scanned collections of voyages, booke of travel and adventure. The result was unsatisfactory. in some particulers the instinctive man before her was her master. At the things which went to make up physical comfort and well being in a state of absolute na ture he certainly surpassed her.

She was thonkful when she walked abroad that she had the shelter of the cave, for everything was drenched from the terrific downpour. If it was the beginning of the wet season she knew that the rains would soon come egain. Still she luxuriated in what freedom she had. Without removing har single germent she plunged into the legoon for a refreshing bath. The men followed her and swam about her moving slowly, with less skill than she, but as easily es a porpoise plunges about the bow of a prograssing ship.

Refreshed, she came back to the mouth of the cave and brought thenca for a careful inspection all her worldly possessions, eave the little heep of clothing which she hed corefully piled upon the jutting shelf in the shadow of the cove for time of need. She ranged them on the sands before her. There was the Bible and the little silver box which she had found in the cave. Sha axamined mora critically its contents, wondering what they might be, and finally there ceme into her mind recognition that they were fint and ateel. When she wished, she could make a fire. She wea happy for the moment in the knowledge and then the uselssaness of the power came across her curlously What dld she want of fire? There was nothing to cook. Its warmth was unnscassary. Still she wee glad to have the ancient flame kindlers and she laid them aside carefully in the box. not knowing whan they might be use ful, under what circumstances invalu able. At least she might regard them as apparatus which would be helpful ia the aurriculum through which sha meant her savage pupil should paea.

Then there was har watch which she guarded as the apple of her eve it was an American watch of the very best make, and although it had gone with her through the waters such was the workmanship of the case that it had taken no harm. It was ticking away bravely, marking time. She thought that for her time had stopped, and yet she was glad, indeed, for the almost human sound it made when she laid it lovingly against her cheek.

There were the bairpins, also, for which sha was most grateful. They enabled her to keep her hair in order. She had a wealth of glorious heir, black as the midnight sky. With the aid of the mirror and of the comb, which also was a principal tracaure he arranged it carefully according to Somatimes when she had finished her tollet she shot a glence at the watch ful man, a human, natural instinctiva gionce, but sha was abla to detect ao change in his mental attituda, which was that of such complate and antire adoration, mingled with timidity and hesitation, that an transient chenga apparently was abla to modify it. Ha ookad upon her as ha might hava looked upon a god, she thought, had he known what a god was and had thera been such a thing to look at.

There was also the pair of scissors: together with tha little housewife with needles and thread. Mirror, heirpins, scissors, sewing materials, comb woman's gear and the Bible. woman's book, she reflected with a certein bitterness, unconscious of tha truth of her thought-a book for children, old woman, end women-led men! Well, that phllosophy upon which she prided herself must come to her aselstance now and she could not efford to disdein the volume which was all that the world of many books offered to her for her purpose, because she did not believe in it. The truth was In her and she could tell him what It was despite the assertion of the printed pages.

in the leather bag thera was absolutely nothing except broken gless and scratched bottle tops of silver and the bag itself wes ruined. She aeparated the pieces of metal and the metal fittings of the beg, which wera also of silver, and filling the rotting leather with sand she presently senk It in the lagoon.

Last of all she exemined what she had brought from the other shore of the island the night before. The silver was tarnished, but by rubbing it in the sand she soon brightenad it. It was heavily engraved and she had no difficulty in making out the words: "John Revell Charnock-llis Dog." After that was a dete "July 22, John Revell Charnock then 1875. would be 21 years old, assuming that this was he and that the dog had been given him when he was born it was more probable, however, that he wes from three to five years old before he become the owner of a dog, which would make him about 25.

The man before her looked younger to her scrutiny than that. Core end trouble hed pessed him by. nothing to vex him he might have been any age. He would probably look just as he was for 20 years or more. Still fancifully adjusting external relations to internel relations, which, after oil, she reelized was the secret of life according to her fevorite philosopher, she concluded that the man wes 25, three years older then she at that moment, a proper difference in their eges for Her face flomed. She scarcely knew why, and she turned to an inspection of the

The first was a diamond, a solitaire, of rare beeuty, she judged. Although she was not especially expert in such matters, she deemed it must be of great volue. There was no inscription of any sort within the nerrow hoop of gold, although sha seerched keenly the inner surfece. The dtamond was curiously set. There was an exquisite trecery of a little coat of arms on either side of the cetting, done in minieture but with a akili to marvel et, too smell even for her brilliant telon to decipher in dateil.

The other she recognised with a smeer as one of those fetters of convention, a wedding ring. It was a heavier hoop of gold much angreved her and the world was not disepwithin. She washed it in the etream end rubbed it in the send until she could make it out. "J. R. C.," sha read, "to M. P. T.." There was a dete efter, September 10, 1869, and then these cabalistic words, "II, Cor. 12:15," which she presently divined to be a reference to some text in the Bible. fit source from which to select the 'posy of a ring," agreeable to those who submit to such ancient follies as the well-named bonds of matrimony.

She reached for the lible and with unfemiliar fingers searched through it until she found the place: "I will very gladly spend end be spent for you: though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved." The beauty of the phrase cought her fancy. She read with a strange new interast the chepter in which these words were shrined. The touch of humen passion come to her across the ions yeere and with the ring sparkling in her own white hand she embodied its tradition in personality and the women who had been so loved stood before her. Her eyes fall egein upor the man and the dream was broken.

She pleced together now all that she had of him, smiling as she did ac at the thought of certain strange stor les she had read wherein men of mar velous deductive powere had brought to solution problems which appeared as impossible of datection as this pre-

John Revell Charnock, evidently the fathar of the man of the island, had married one M. P. T. oa the 10th of September, 1869. The man before her was a Virginian, therefore. Say he was born in 1871, it would make him 25 years old, in accordance with her first guess. The father and mother, possibly rulned by the results of the civil war, had embarked on some vessel to seek a fortune in a naw Something had happened to land. the ship and the woman, the little boy and the dog had landed in some way upon these shores alone after some horrible voyage, perhaps like that she have been five or six years old, sine he would have died being deserted. The woman had, indeed, died, and the dog with her, and left the lad alone. Alone he had been for a scora of years on that Island. What watchful Providence? . . . Stop! She be-liaved in no Providence. What strange Stop! She bemystarious fate kept him from the fate of the other two, had praserved bim alona . . . for her?

So she wova a history out of her transura treve for this man, e history which at least satisfied her and which the more sha reasoned about it and the more she tasted it, seemed absojutaly adequate and antiraly correct. Wall, sha hed opportunity now and she was glad. Sha faced tha future calmly, recognizing her cheaca and her work and set about with systematic method, order and persistence to teach this man what it was to be a human being, to give him, as repidly as she might communicate it and as he might receive it, all the learning sha possassed, to compensate him with no further delay for those 25 years of sliencs.

Was it for this she had been trained and educated at great cost of time and money end effort? That she being a woman should give it all to this one man without money and without

CHAPTER VI.

The Bassless Fabric. True philosphy is ascetle. It may beet be precticed under conditione in which the material ie in abeyance. It exalts the spiritual. It is distinguished by indifference to environment. There is nothing so fatal to its profession as axtravagenca. Frugality ia to the phllosopher what modesty is to a woman-the essential thing without which it and she cease to be.

The atmosphere into which Katherine Brenton wee suddenly plunged by her bold step was the very antithesis of these requirements. It was unhealthy, and like unheelthy airs it bred disacter. She had been treined to independence of conditions, to disregard of circumstances, as well as to disdeln of restraint; but there was that within her surroundings which, from her first experience of them, she felt instinctively to be vitieting, which tended to deprave, which precluded the exercise of clear, uninfluenced mentality. Especially in her case was this true since the luxury with which ahe had been sucrounded appealed so eubtly to the preponderant, and must be admitted, immortel feminine in her composition. Sex distinction, eex difference was the one thing ageinst which she fought. Sex equality was the supreme good to be desired in her scheme of right relationships between the individual and the universe While she rebelled egainst her sex yet she rejoiced in it. Gled was she sometimes on that very account that to her wee given the opportunity to prove her superiority to the limitations, disabilities and men made trammels of womankind. Born of two fanatics on the same subject, whose insenity was modified and mullifled by hrilliency of intellect in avery other field of investigation end experiment, Katherine Brenton had been treined to the hour for her profession, for the exploitation of her principles. The greatest of universi ties pointed to her with peculier pride as one of the children of the free free from everything in thought and determined to be free from evarything in action. Much was expected from pointed at the first result of her mental labor. There wers certein fachioned peopla who deplored the perversion of so much telent and even genius to the defense of error, but these dld not count. The world bought her book in thousands, read it avidly end regarded it as the lest word of the last woman of the end of the ege on the eex problem. Cleverly disguising her philosophy in the form of fiction, with one bound she had leaped to the fore front of all the writare atruggling for recognition. Publishers sought her. Magasinas pursued her Another book took shape in har mind Singularly enough her education and the erratic bent of her mind had left her primarily quite unspolled. She was the product not merely of her age. her environment, har parents, but of a long generation of people to whom her thoughts would have been as ab horrent as her paraon was agreeable. The unconscious Christianity which surrounds the world and especially the world of woman kept her pure and sweet and lovable-thass in spits of, not because of, har perveree and pervarted philosophy. Though ehe defied convention in its spirit, sha was naturally subject to it in its axarciae. For instance, to har the marriage bond wae, indeed, a bond, the marriaga vow a confession of weakness—on the part of the woman, at least-and the marriage relation an acknowledgement of inferiority-again on the part of the woman. She would have none of these things in her life. Yet, as sha thought, she had given har haart to a manaias, the submission to the eternal lawl-and although their relationship was sanctioned by nothing but their affection, it was to her as pure and as holy a thing as if the contract had been witnessed and blest hy a thousand priests. What was it to him? Sha counted without the other sex. Many other woman unfortunately have done the sama.

Not content with the writing of books, har intense devotion to her cause, coupled with her unflagging energy, had found vent upon the lecture platform. The curlous crowded to her feet at once, so bold, so radical, so beautiful and so innocent. One of her first converts had been the only son of a multi-millionaire, hygona bonansa king of the Pacific slope. Ilis conversion was not so much an affort of pure reason as of primal passion, although that fect was in no wise apparent to her. Sha would find that out later. This modern Hypatia, skilled in the learning of the achools, burning with exhaustless saal, permeated with flary energy, was yet as innocent in some ways as any of har humbler sisters. As that good Book which she disdained in the newer lliuminations which hed come to her, might have said of her, she was in the world but not of it. Unconsciously she fulfilled many injunctions of him who had she hut known it was the greatest of philosophers. Neturelly she kept unspotted from the world. Yet when the young man who had engaged her affections proposed to her that they should put her theories in practice, after some hesitation she had accoded to hie proposition. It was a species of ssif-immolation not far from heroism that made her consent, indeed, she did not reelize how heroic it was With no other ceremony than a clasp of the hand and an unspoken, wordless promise of trust, devotion, single hearted elliance, publicly and before God and nien, without a thought for the one and with no full regligation of the thoughts of the other-at least on her pert-they had gone away together, hand in hend; he and she together in love like any other pair since Eve mated with Adem in the down of the world's first morning.

Yet there has never been on Eden of which man has known without its serpent, in the cebin of thet gorgeous yecht, Sethanes reared his heed. The first week or so of the edventure had been filled with idyllic happiness, happiness so great that it was strong enough to quiet certain low, still, small voices of conscience which the women rightly ascribed to a stronge atovism of encient prejudice to which her philosophy was an yet unequel.

Howsver, such conditions did not long persist. Her disciple was inelined, presently she found to her sorrow, to take a comewhet lower view of the situation then sulted her own high-souled views. The ardor of her devotes cooled os his passion increased. Shut up in the nerrow confines of a ship-greet end splendld though this yecht was beyond imagination-little cherecteristics heretofore uneuspected developed in the mere men. The course of true love was not so smooth es the summer seas over which they coiled. The air in which they lived was ruffled by flurries in which experience would heve found presage for coming deeper storm. The image that hed feet of clay sought for similar earthly alloy in the companion lmege which was made of pure gold sented it desperetely. The convert having gained hie desire, weakened in his principles. There was no relexa tion in his devotion, in his tenderness. in anything outword and visible, but the high philosophy which hed made the joint effort almost a self-sacrifice of demonstration was slowly vanish ing from one heart while the other clung the more tenaclously to lt.

It was the old, old story In a little the cotspaw developed into the tampeet. When it appeared it came with surprising swiftness. The woman found that in neither abstract thought nor mental speculation was there any protection for her. There might be no God in heaven, but there was a conscience in her breast. Finelly she broke away from the men so far as she could do so whan they were both in the same ship of which he was lord and master. She would have nothing more to do with him save that which common decency and the bare civilitles of life demanded of her. Denied the privilegss upon which he had counted, the man grew sevage and showed the clovan foot. The disagreement became a quarrel. The quarrel ran through saveral phases. Ashamed of himself ha had recented at first. Then he had sworn again allegiance to the specious philisophy which she now realised he had only professed, consciously or unconsciously, that he might possess her. But she was not deceived. There was no truth in his worde; his assevarations carried conviction to har soul. Again stormed and raged; once more applogised and appealed," but periods of calm grew shorter and the periods of storm grew longar and mor vehamast. The woman alone w ataadfast. She was ovarwheimed wit shame, the horror of the situation wa rising upon har.

She began to realise how helple she was. Under the inspiration of bellef, which wes as honast as it we mistaken, she had put harsaif in th power of this man. Even if she we shore, there would be no one whom she could appeal, and here the ship she was helplass. Lingerin remains of better things had kapt his from the last resort of the tyrant-
